Early Life and Career

Zoaya Counts was born in Russia in 1895. Her father was a military officer, and her mother was a pianist. From a young age, Zoaya showed a passion for adventure and a fearless spirit. She learned to ride horses and swim at a young age, and she loved to explore the outdoors.

In 1913, Zoaya's family moved to the United States. Zoaya quickly adapted to her new country and began to pursue her dream of becoming a pilot. She took flying lessons at the Curtiss Flying School in Hammondsport, New York, and in 1915, she became one of the first women in the United States to earn a pilot's license.

Pioneering Flights and Adventures

After earning her pilot's license, Zoaya began to take on daring flights and adventures. In 1916, she flew across the country from New York to San Francisco, becoming the first woman to fly solo across the United States. She also set several altitude records and became known for her fearless flying.

In 1917, Zoaya joined the French Foreign Legion and flew combat missions during World War I. She was one of the few women to serve as a pilot in the war, and she flew over 100 combat missions. She was awarded the Croix de Guerre for her bravery and service.

Later Life and Legacy

After the war, Zoaya returned to the United States and continued to fly. She became a commercial pilot and flew for several airlines. She also wrote a book about her experiences, "The Flying Life of Zoaya Counts." In her later years, Zoaya retired from flying and lived in New York City. She died in 1995 at the age of 99.

Zoaya Counts was a pioneering female aviator and adventurer who made history with her daring flights and fearless spirit. She was a role model for women all over the world, and her legacy continues to inspire today.
