Formed in 1776, the 3rd Continental Light Dragoons were a diverse group of men, drawn from all walks of life. They were farmers, blacksmiths, merchants, and even former British soldiers. What united them was their unwavering commitment to the cause of American independence.

The regiment's first commander was Colonel Henry Lee III, a brilliant strategist and charismatic leader. Under Lee's command, the 3rd Continental Light Dragoons quickly gained a reputation for their daring raids and lightning-fast charges. They harassed British supply lines, captured enemy outposts, and even rescued American prisoners of war.

One of the regiment's most famous exploits was the Battle of Paulus Hook, which took place in 1779. The British had fortified Paulus Hook, a strategic peninsula on the New Jersey shoreline, and the Americans were determined to retake it. The 3rd Continental Light Dragoons led the assault, charging across a narrow causeway under heavy enemy fire. They captured the British garrison and held the fort until reinforcements arrived.

The Battle of Paulus Hook was a turning point in the war. It boosted the morale of the Continental Army and showed the British that the Americans were capable of winning decisive victories. The 3rd Continental Light Dragoons continued to play a vital role in the war, fighting in numerous battles and skirmishes. They were present at the Battle of Yorktown, where they helped to secure the American victory.

After the war, the 3rd Continental Light Dragoons were disbanded. However, their legacy lived on. The regiment's daring raids and heroic charges became the stuff of legend. And the men who served in the regiment went on to become some of the most respected and influential leaders of the new nation.
